I. OVERVIEW (Summary of what students will learn, Narrative)

The purpose of this course is to combine a study of geography and cultures and connect it to the foods that are enjoyed around the world. Our interconnected world allows students to connect with a variety of global foods and cuisines that were previously impeded by a divide in travel and technology. Students will begin this course learning important geography skills that include understanding the five themes of geography, map and atlas skills, and an analysis of land use maps, charts and graphs. Students will learn to define culture and be able to identify cultural traits that are common across the globe. Students will then use their knowledge of geography and culture to travel the globe to learn about specific countries. Students will create maps, charts, and graphs of these countries, highlight key cultural traits, and learn about notable cuisines. Students will then be able to explore, research, and create a traditional dish from that country.
